Australian Boxing Authorities Think They Now Know Just What Causes a "Knockout."

Coorrest, 1916, as The Press Continue to Now we can find out all about it! The Australian boxing authorities have been conducting an investigation to find out just why a punch on the jaw, properly delivered. gives the referee a chance to count

"The French surgeon Dr. Lomen probably has the right idea." says Boxing Notes."

"Dr. Lomen argues that when the jawbone is struck on the 'point,' the condyle, or boss, at the upper and inner end of the bone is driven forcibly upward into the glenoid cavity of the skull, behind which noid cavity of the skull, behind which is situated the delicate labyrinth of the inner ear. The jawbone strikes hard upon the thin plate of bone that supports these sensitive organs, and gives a shock to the semi-circular canals that is instantly transmitted by them to the builb, or the cerebellum, producing dizziness and momentary paralysis, and that's where the referce says 'nine, out'!"

Think I'll have to consult Tom Sharkey on this theory. Tom used to be something of an expert on knockouts.

"I like to fight Dillon because it's so interesting to study him in the pring. He's the greatest of all the sighters I've ever seen—a white Joe Walcott. He's the hardest hitter and a wonderful boxer. Dillon has a trick of fighting with his head lowered, hooking out' of the top of his eyes. When he lands a blow that he thinks might put you in trouble he lifts his head suddenly and takes a good look. If you wabble he goes after you like a wildcat. He's a great finisher. If he docen't see any effect from his punch he just fights along at the same pace. I've fought him seven punch he just fights along at the same pace. I've fought him seven times. The first time he knocked me down twice in the first round, and I had a hard time to go through with it. I've never been knocked out, but I often think luck is with me when I finish a fight with Dillon without get. The said. "and that's all. He's a fine fellow. But I'm willing to fight him any time.
